

The Toronto Institute for Contemporary Psychoanalysis is pleased to announce the

2010 FOUNDATIONS PROGRAM:
CLINICAL PRINCIPLES & APPLICATIONS
A 30-Session Certificate Program
September 2010 – April 2011

This is a clinically-focused program for those desiring to learn the basic principles and applications of psychoanalytic therapy. This program will also help prepare those interested in applying to the four-year Psychoanalytic Training Program at the Toronto Institute for Contemporary Psychoanalysis who do not have training in psychoanalytic therapy.

The program consists of weekly two-hour seminars divided into five six-session modules.

Module 1:

A six-session module that introduces the psychoanalytic frame of reference including the analytic attitude, and the concepts of development; motivations; drives; object relations; the self; and relationality.

Module 2:

A six-session module that encompasses the notion of the unconscious (an overview and evolution of the concept as it relates to technique); the idea of change as working through; the concepts of transference and counter-transference and how they are understood and appear in the clinical process.

Module 3:

A six-session module devoted to process and modes of listening (what one listens "for"); empathy and mentalization; and the relational elements in the exchange.

Modules 4 and 5:

Two six-session modules, each with a senior clinician, in which participants present cases and clinical process is discussed. The modules will also include clinical presentations by the instructor of his/her own case material.
